Mannose-specific lectin of the mite Dermatophagoides farinae. D. farinae is a ubiquitous mite responsible for many of the allergens of which house dust mite allergens are the most common. This mite produces allergens on the skin and several of them have been purified and characterized. In order to find new allergens, we have searched for lectins in D. farinae and we have isolated a lectin specific for mannose residues from the cytoplasm of this mite. Its physicochemical properties are in the range of lectins described in the literature. The mannose-specific lectin is a monomer of M(r) 29,000 and contains 2 carbohydrate chains which are only 1-6-linked mannose residues in length. The mannose-specific lectin of D. farinae is a highly purified protein in its neutral form and it shows a limited toxicity. This lectin is mainly located on the cuticle and the body surface of the mite and the binding specificity is equivalent to those of the mannose-specific lectin of the other mites studied so far.Q: parse xml and save it into StringBuffer XML parsing is not so easy in android.
